講演詳細（使用言語は英語です）

The world remains vulnerable to old and new risks such as: global warming and increasing natural disasters; expansion of cybersecurity and terrorism risk; wars and regional conflicts. Thanks to insurance, we can maintain society sustainable, the economy resilient, and offer people and entities a growth momentum.

In this lecture, Professor Kwon reads a story about insurance development and selected historical events that have led us to shape the insurance industry. He also talks about less known exotic insurance products and the future of insurance.

講師紹介 W. Jean KWON 博士

Professor Kwon holds the EAG Manton Chair Professorship in International Insurance at the Greenberg School of Risk Management, St. Joh's University, New York. He has been an educator, insurance regulator and industry specialist. He has assisted the Center for the Study of Insurance Regulation, Asia-Pacific Journal of Risk and Insurance, and several other organizations and intergovernmental agencies around the world.

He is active in academic research and book writing. He specializes in insurer/market/country analysis, regulation and critical issues in product and market development.
