I decided to join this program because I major in engineering and Japan is one of the world's leading countries in the field of technology, so I thought this program would be a good opportunity for me to see the leading technologies and gain a lot of knowledge directly related to my studies.

The program impressed me a lot in many ways. Staff members and professors were very kind and took care of participants very well. I have gained a lot of experience and learned many interesting real topics from the field trips. Moreover, I could practice my English throughout the program and met new friends whom I exchanged cultures with. The best part of the program for me is the field trip to Toshiba which is one of the biggest companies in Japan.

Lastly, this is a very good program for the person who studies science and technology and wants to gain a wonderful experience and knowledge in Japan.

To summarize this program, the program contents are really cool, however, I would say that it inspired my feeling of respect a lot rather than just mentioning it is a cool program. For some reasons, there were only two students who eventually participated in the program. However, we didn't feel being treated differently. On the contrary, this small number made the program more flexible, and provided us lots of time to talk with professors in person.

Professor KUMANO is one of the greatest professors I met in Meiji University, and there were also other excellent professors like him who were involved in this program. As an instructor or a superior, he brought us much more than academic matters. From him, I was able to see some great characters of Japanese people and treasurable aspects, such as being humble, diligent and courteous, which gave me a very deep impression. What is more important is that the role he played in the program was like the captain of a ship. All the administrative staff members, professors, and students who devoted themselves for the program also made us feel at home.

Moreover, the site visits (field trips) were extremely interesting because we seldom have the opportunity to get close to Japanese companies, factories, or laboratories as a foreign visitor. It was an attractive and well-organized program. If you can get a chance, I strongly recommend that you take part in it!
